Chaplain's Corner

Throughout the New Testament we gain wonderful insights into Jesus' knowledge of Scripture. Luke paints for us two pictures of Jesus as a person who loved Scripture and what it revealed to Him about His Father in heaven. We see Jesus at twelve years of age so absorbed in listening to the teachers and asking questions that He forgets to go home with His family! Luke later reveals Jesus as one who has done the hard work of learning the Word of God, when He preaches in his hometown synagogue, quoting from the Book of Isaiah:

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he has anointed me to preach good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim release to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty those who are oppressed, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." (Lk 4:18-19)

The Spirit of the Lord is indeed upon Jesus, who has prepared Himself with a deep knowledge of Scripture to be led by the Spirit to understand and apply it, using these verses to announce His ministry.

Jesus, the Word of God Himself, chooses a verse that embodies the love of God and the mission of the Son. This tells us that action on God's Word is as much a part of our worship of God as is prayer, singing, sacraments, and Scripture. Jesus acted on the verse from Isaiah throughout his ministry. Call to mind the Scriptures that have meant so much to you—a verse, story, proverb, a psalm—and consider how these words of God have guided you to live as a follower of Christ, to strengthen and inspire faith in actions throughout your life.

Growing up, I remember that my mother kept on her nightstand a worn red leather bible stuffed with bookmarks, clippings, and notes. When we moved to Florida, her bible kept its place at her bedside. One day, after she had passed away, I was looking through it and found a yellowed notecard, and on it in her handwriting a verse from the Book of Joel 2:25, which reads, "I will repay you for the years the locusts have eaten..." I recognized this verse as the one she quoted to me throughout the years, as if prompting me to remember it throughout my life.

I sat on her bed holding the card in my hand and remembered the times in her life as a wife and a mother when the "locusts" of this life came upon her, threatening to take everything away—struggles with alcoholism, financial problems, fighting legal battles against people who cheated our family business, and finally my father's injury and disability. It was then that I understood how this verse strengthened her faith, as weak as it must have been sometimes in the face of her fears. Just in bringing this one verse to my attention over the years she taught me that it is vital not only to know Scripture but also to act upon it, to live it, to let it sustain my faith by remembering God's promise that losses of this life will be restored—in God's way and in God's time—and to live each day with faith in that promise.

The verse which Jesus spoke through Luke is likewise meant to be shared and lived. My mother's verse from Joel reminds me that God is at the end of all suffering and will restore all that was lost. Jesus Himself sought out a chapter and verse while preaching in his hometown synagogue. Even today this verse is manifested in our hearing: that God's promise is fulfilled in him. We know this is true, and that God's inspired and authoritative Word to us in Scripture will stand for eternity. And for now, in our present lives, we are challenged to read and remember that God's words strengthen us just as the words of Isaiah did for Jesus. In knowing the Word, we, like Him, can share the promise—and the present reality—of God's kingdom with others.
